Should humans keep aliens as pets?

Many of us are clearly curious about the subject of space creatures. Whether we are questioning if they are even real, wondering if we should take them to earth if we find them, or where we would find them, we are all asking what these things are capable of. With our space travel technologies expanding further and further into our universe, and making living on another planet a small possibility, humans wonder if there is a miniature chance they could stumble across a lost alien!

Some convincing arguments say that aliens should be pets, because their intelligence and new technology could help find cures for major illnesses, yet some people think that they should stay on their far-away planets, as they might be aggressive and attack, which could be disastrous, considering all the advanced weapons they could have. Now let's take a deeper look into both sides of the argument, and see if the discussions can persuade you to one side.

Should aliens be kept as pets?
For (Aliens SHOULD be pets)	Against (Aliens SHOULD NOT be pets)
-might have some amazing talents to share	-they may be happier and safer in their own habitat
-protect you from annoying siblings or enemies	-other creatures aren't there for us to use and work for us
-may have powers that could change the world	-they might become unsafe and harm others
-they might not be safe on their home planet	-they could be sad and miss their families.

You will need to select three key points that you want to include in your writing.
